

Strythe Dragon

Strythe are slower, but more powerful than the nimbler fruit dragons and dral. Comparable in size to the velra, strythe are distinguished by their huge front fangs, important both for catching mountain goats and impressing mates. Their large size makes them uniquely capable in battle, though their endurance does not equal the lighter cross breed dragons. Strythe also have the largest capacity in their second stomach which holds the rotting ragoon weed, the source of their fire breath.

Identification

Dark brown back and tail. Black-tipped spines and tan underbelly. Large upper fangs, typically stained red from blood.

Statistics

Name: Bander
Rider: Ferrin, Chief of the Montazi
Weight: 1100 lbs
Wingspan: 30 ft
Load: 280lbs (350 max)
Temperment: Solitary, but extremely aggressive during mating season.

...from the fantasy epic Fall of the Dragon Prince. Find your dragon at authordanallen.com

art by Nate Hawks